

MAYOR DANIEL TALLON AND JOHN E. REDMOND.

John E. Redmond, M. P., and Daniel Tallon, mayor of Dublin, are in this country and will visit the leading cities in the interest of the Parnell monument fund. The cornerstone of the monument was laid in Dublin October 7. The visitors have met with good success since their arrival in America, the collections so far, especially in New York, amounting to a goodly sum.

SIAM GOES TO-DAY

Will Probably Have No New Experiences.

How Uncle Sam Loads Animal Transports—Apparatus to Save Leg Weariness.

The United States animal transport Siam began putting the first consignment of horses on board yesterday. One hundred and fifty were hoisted in yesterday and the balance, over two hundred will be on board by this afternoon. It is expected that the vessel will be able to get away by five o'clock, and will be followed two days later by the Lennox, it being the purpose to have the two vessels keep together until arrival at Manila. Capt. Povey of the transportation department has been assigned as Quartermaster in charge of the two transports, he taking personal charge of the Lennox, the Siam being in charge of his agent, Mr. Robe. This latter arrangement was necessitated by some changes in the Quartermaster's department and Capt. Hughes being given other assignments.

Forty-eight civilians under J. H. Forsyth will take charge of the animals on the Siam as the present stall constructions will make less work for the men in charge. Surgeon Howell and Veterinary Surgeon McDonald have also been assigned to the Siam. No trouble, such as was experienced on the Siam's last trip, is expected, as Colonel Ruhlman has personally seen to it that the stalls and fittings were constructed for rough weather. Each animal will be confined in a boxed stall with side rails, so that a severe rolling of the vessel will not allow a fallen animal to get into the next stall and trip the horse there, thus causing the throw of an entire line which happened on the Siam during her struggle with the typhoon.

The hoisting methods of the army have been perfected to such an extent that the animals can be loaded with dispatch. The horses do not like their aerial trip toward the mast-head, and the mules give vent to their displeasure by plenty of kicking and biting, but for all the trouble each animal tries to give the men, the work is performed quickly and rarely with any damage to the animal. A big boxed stall, with doors opening from each end is used for the hoisting. Opening both doors the hostler leads the animal into the box, and as soon as the animal is fully inside both doors are closed upon the astonished animal, the winches go rattly-bang, and the next moment the box is in the air, is swung in toward the hatch, and lowered to the deck to which the animal has been assigned. He is led out of the box and buckled into his numbered stall, fastened with halter chains to the side stanchions, breast-board adjusted, and is ready for his long journey. There he is compelled to stand during the long tedium of the voyage, often taking thirty days between Honolulu and Manila, with no opportunity for exercise. But when his legs become weary, and sleep is denied him on account of the vessel's rollings, Uncle Sam has provided a body sling to support him. This is a great boon, and as soon as the animal gets accustomed to this strange piece of harness, he easily learns to throw his whole weight into it to save his legs and feet which often become terrible swelled.

The Lennox will carry two hundred and fifty-six mules and two hundred and one horses.
